To whom it may concern,

I am applying for the position of IT Support Specialist which has recently been posted on Indeed. I will be graduating Nova Scotia Community College's IT Programming course in 2024 and will be looking for a job placement/internship this summer for 5 weeks.

I am still developing skills and I think I could be a great addition, whether it be to look at back end stuff, sort files as a intern using database programs, or even see if I can change the website to make it work a bit better.

I may still be in school and developing skills to become a better programmer and code writer but there are many things that would make me a great fit for the company such as being a very social and outgoing person. I am also very personable and find it easy to make a good first impression on people. I have been told by many people that I am very easy to get along with and I believe that the social aspect of a travel agency is one of the most important as you are not only dealing with people in person, but online as well when it comes to helping them find the best prices for trips/hotels.

Sincerely,

Noah Taylor
